

Left—New York's royal visitor of last fall in Prince Albert and silk topper—a new picture of the next King of England taken on the occasion of a recent visit to Guy's Hospital, London. Ever notice that the prince just can't keep his hat on straight?
Underwood

Harvard University's great astronomical observatory at Arequipa, Peru, from which constant watch is being made for signals from Mars. Beyond—To the left looms the snow-capped peak of the El Misti volcano. Above—The highest crater in the world, that of El Misti, is photographed for the first time, the daring photographer succeeding in his 20,000 foot climb after almost insurmountable difficulties. El Misti has been dormant for years.
L. Chester from Amer. Photo Serv.

Right—If the Mayor of Los Angeles ever goes to Honolulu he will be equipped to enter the gates of the capital city of Hawaii without help. The powers that be in Honolulu recently sent him this giant wooden key, draped with an aloha wreath, with the request that it be used at will.
Kington-Vic

Right—Meet Mr. William Le Gendre, of New York, the man who organized the state police and who has just been appointed chairman of the American committee for the aid of the Republic of Poland.
Underwood

Houdini had better look to his laurels! Here are three photographs that picture a most remarkable yet authentic stunt, the performance of which by an East Indian is causing a sensation in Germany. Widhva Bahu, born thirty years ago in Bombay, doubles himself up to occupy the smallest possible space, is wrapped in burlap and buried several feet underground, where he remains without food, water or air for eight days. The picture on the left shows the living corpse being wrapped in his burlap shroud. Above—The contortionist is buried alive while officials record the circumstances. Right—The human phenomenon is resurrected alive and kicking after eight days underground. Bahu claims to have spent practically all his life practicing this amazing performance, the accomplishment of which is baffling European scientists.
Kadel & Herbert

Left—Meet Thornton W. Burgess and an intimate friend of his, Lady Chickadee. Burgess, who is a great bird and animal lover and a dyed-in-the-wool nature student, is the creator of Peter Rabbit, Johnny Chuck, Reddy Fox and all the other lovable characters of the Green Meadows and Green Forest that make his BEDTIME STORIES in The Tribune so fascinating alike to children and grown-ups.

